Mimi Schwartz was just 19 years old when she arrived in the United States from Poland in 1981. She had come to America with dreams of a better life, but her dreams were soon shattered when she was falsely accused of murder and sentenced to life in prison.

Schwartz spent the next 14 years behind bars, fighting to prove her innocence. She was finally exonerated in 2001, after DNA evidence proved that she did not commit the murder.

Schwartz's story is an incredible tale of resilience and hope. Despite being wrongfully imprisoned for so many years, she never gave up on her dream of freedom. She fought for her innocence, and she eventually won.

Schwartz's story is also a reminder of the importance of due process and the presumption of innocence. Schwartz was convicted of murder based on nothing more than circumstantial evidence. She was never given a fair trial, and she was denied her basic rights.

Schwartz's story is a powerful indictment of the American criminal justice system. It is a system that is too often stacked against the poor and the marginalized. Schwartz was a victim of this system, but she refused to be silenced. She fought for her innocence, and she won.
