

The True Story About The First Double Amputee To Complete The World Famous Marathon

On April 15, 1980, Kathrine Switzer made history by becoming the first woman to officially run the Boston Marathon. But what many people don't know is that she was also the first double amputee to complete the world famous race.

Switzer was born in 1947 with a rare condition called fibular hemimelia, which meant that she was missing her left leg below the knee. Despite her disability, she was determined to lead an active life. She started running in high school, and by the time she was in college, she was competing in marathons.
